According to Gadamer, hermeneutic philosophy is the heir of an older tradition of practical philosophy. Its main question, how is understanding possible, is completely situated within the horizon of praxis. Starting from Heidegger's definition of being as time, and understanding as the mode of being or Dasein, Gadamer comes to an insight

Summary: For quite some time the evidence-based practice discourse in social work has been influential. While this may be viewed as a positive development, problems arise when some of the proponents of the discourse deride other approaches in social work as unscientific. In particular, it is of concern that those who embrace a psychodynamic perspective have been corralled into a ...
